Learn More About Residential Schools

CRANBROOK, BRITISH COLUMBIA

A former residential school near Cranbrook, B.C., has been transformed into a First Nations–run resort. What sets St. Eugene Golf Resort & Casino apart is the way guests can learn about its troubled past. A reception plaque quotes the late elder Mary Paul: “Since it was within the St. Eugene Mission School that the culture of the Kootenay Indian was taken away, it should be within the building that it is returned.” The on-site Ktunaxa Interpretive Centre—run by a branch of the Ktunaxa Nation Council—offers guided experiences that include a documentary and tour. Don’t miss #kamnin’tik (The Children), a monument that honours children who were at residential schools in Canada.

MORE INDIGENOUS EXPERIENCES

On Lennox Island, P.E.I., bake bannock in the sand and eat local clams with the Mi’kmaq people. The Lennox Island First Nation welcomes visitors to its cultural centre and also offers art experiences.

The Inuit hamlet of Pangnirtung, Nunavut, is home to the Uqurmiut Centre for Arts & Crafts, famous for its elaborate tapestries, as well as crocheted “Pang” hats.

Stunning Haida Gwaii, B.C. is made up of 150 islands, with mountains, rainforests and a rich Indigenous heritage. Longhouses and memorial poles are a draw for many.

In Yellowknife, N.W.T., spend time aboard a commercial fishing boat with Great Slave Lake Tours and hear about third-generation fisher Shawn Buckley’s experience growing up in a traditional Indigenous community.

The National Arts Centre in Ottawa now has an Indigenous theatre stream, as well as the Moshkamo Indigenous Arts Festival in September.
